About the Humility of St. Nicholas of Japan (+1912)

Archbishop Nikolai seldom talked about his family or himself. When he did speak of himself, he referred only to his own failings and sins. He frequently directed seminarians that they should love everyone equally but confessed his own failure.

He never told anyone when he was promoted in the ranks of clergy or received awards. When he was elevated from Bishop to Archbishop, no one in the Japanese Orthodox Church knew it. One day, Archdeacon Dimitri learned of Bishop Nikolai's elevation when the consul congratulated Nikolai. Dimitri then came back to Nikolai-do and told everyone. Similarly, he never told anyone that he had received the Order of St. Vladimir, first rank, from Czar Nikolai II and that no one had ever before received it as a clergyman. People only found out through the newspapers. When people congratulated him about it, Nikolai said to them that he thanked the sincerity of the Czar, but frankly he thought that prizes and awards were unsuitable for clergyman and missionaries, and therefore those customs should be abandoned.

The more all of our parishioners know about and participate in the manifold aspects of our parish life; the better for all of us as individuals and community members.
